The Benefits of the State Citizen American Passport

Many people have asked what are the benefits of the State Citizen American passport, but this question can only be answered by understanding the value of the most improved and polished version of the Revocation of Election (ROE). So if you haven't read the introduction to the ROE, please do that first, as filing the ROE is a mandatory prerequisite to obtaining the State Citizen passport. You would be committing fraud if you apply for the State Citizen passport without first properly documenting yourself as a State Citizen using the perfected ROE.

Once you understand the virtually limitless benefits of filing the ROE, then understanding the logic of changing your passport to the State Citizen version is a no-brainer. Obviously, when one has restored one's status as a "sovereign without subjects", as designated in Supreme Court cases, it simply makes sense to change one's ID to reflect that.

The government doesn't advertise this. Nor does it publicly acknowledge it in any high-profile way. But it does most definitely take silent notice of it. One's status, properly documented in the government databases, is meant to be the key part of one's profile - - but not the only part. The other parts include one's choice of ID, one's behavior, and one's way of dealing with all public servants.

"If it looks like a duck, quacks like a duck, and walks like a duck, it is probably a duck." This is the maxim of profile. Thus if one has filed the ROE but still behaves like a slave, one's profile will be compromised, weak, and unimpressive to the White Hats in government.

If a man is a doctor but wears a nurse label, he is not showing his true status. If woman is a CEO but sits at the desk of a secretary and behaves like a secretary, she too is obfuscating her true status in the company. If someone has a Ph.D. but only shows a B.A. behind one's name, there again one is failing to show the recognition that a university has afforded. Likewise, if one is a State Citizen, it only makes sense to carry ID indicating this.

There is a rumor that those who have the State Citizen passport become tacitly designated in a "do not detain" status with the federal public servants. This writer can neither prove nor disprove this statement. For sure, no one I know who has the State Citizen passport has been detained by any federal agent, but that is insufficiet to constitute proof.

What is for certain is that by rounding out one's profile - - properly filing the perfected ROE, carrying ID that reflects it, and behaving like a sovereign with public servants - - creates the strongest treatment of respect by said servants.

The ICC (Identity Certificate of Citizenship) is the true ID of the sovereign - - but very few people have tested it at international borders. The State Citizen passport, by contrast, looks and functions like any other passport. It is universally accepted at international borders without question.

Since it doesn't SAY "State Citizen" in the passport, people ask how one knows it is encoded to honor that status. One key is that the word "The" is removed from "United States of America". Another key is that the passport number starts with the letter "A". These are "wink wink" signs of the silent government acknowledgement.
